

Part I: Reading Comprehension

(6 marks)

Answers:

- 1- The classification of drawings based on purpose
- 2- The difference between the first category of drawing and the other kinds:
The first type of drawing allows the designer to explore ideas (known as ideation) and work conceptually, often in the form of sketches. The second type allows the designer to communicate to others, including members of the design team, the client, end users, consultants, and other professionals (presentation drawings). The third type of drawing conveys the technical information required for construction (construction documents or working drawings).
- 3- The designer in the second type cannot work individually because he has to communicate to others, including members of the design team, the client, end users, consultants, and other professionals.
